DETAILED ACTION

Response to Arguments

As a preliminary note, the claims have not been amended by Applicant's and since the grounds for rejection have not been changed by the Examiner, the rejection in the previous office action has been incorporated by reference and is not be repeated in the instant action.

Applicant argues, "The suggestion to combine cannot be based on statements or material taken only from the present specification, as doing so constitutes proscribed hindsight." Applicant further argues "...the modification proposed in the office action lacks the necessary motivation to combine, since neither of the citations provides any suggestion or reason therein to make the proposed combination" and that the teachings were found in the present specification."

First and foremost the office action provided a motivation "for the benefit of promoting child adoption by providing a child to the most deserving parent contestant", thus the point of contention seems to be whether the motivation was proscribed hindsight. The Examiner finds it remarkable that Applicant's feel that American Adoptions website does not promote providing a child to the most deserving parents. The website clearly discloses a finding a homestudy provider (page 1) and parent contestants providing their bio data indicating why they feel they are most deserving.

Art Unit: 2623

The Examiner submits that adoption process is not easy, and parents most deserving are given preference over other parents. The motivation is not proscribed hindsight, and as a result, Applicant's arguments are not persuasive.

Applicant further argues "These statements make clear that professionals in the adoption industry vehemently rejection and linkage between the adoption process and game show competitions. Therefore, clearly, there is no incentive within the conventional prior art, including conventional adoption practices, to combine the features presented on the adoptionsolutions.com website with viewer participation game show format, such as described in Brasseur et al."

The statements provided by Applicants cite "Several adoption professionals said Tuesday that characterizing the adoption process as a competition is inappropriate and insensitive." The Examiner respectfully submits that the view of several adoption professionals does not necessarily reflect the view of all professionals. The Examiner further respectfully submits that Applicant's invention, although not specifically disclosed or recited, is also a "game show". Applicant's claims clearly recite broadcasting the adoption program to set-top boxes, wherein viewers select the parent contestants they feel are most deserving. In fact claim 13 recites the parent-contestants are subject to continuous and on-demand surveillance and claims 7 – 8 recite "wherein the selections are supplemented by bonus points" and "further wherein said points are awarded to parent-contestants based upon the performance of specified games or tasks". The Examiner respectfully submits that Applicant's invention is a competition in which the lives of everyone involved in the adoption process is subjected to more of game show than an intimate process. It should be further noted that the remarks by the professionals were made on 20/20 on April 28, 2004, which is well after the filing and effective dates of the Brasseur reference and American adoptions website.

As a result, Applicant's arguments are not persuasive.
